Turning Short-Term Funding into Long-Term Landscape Transformation

Presented by

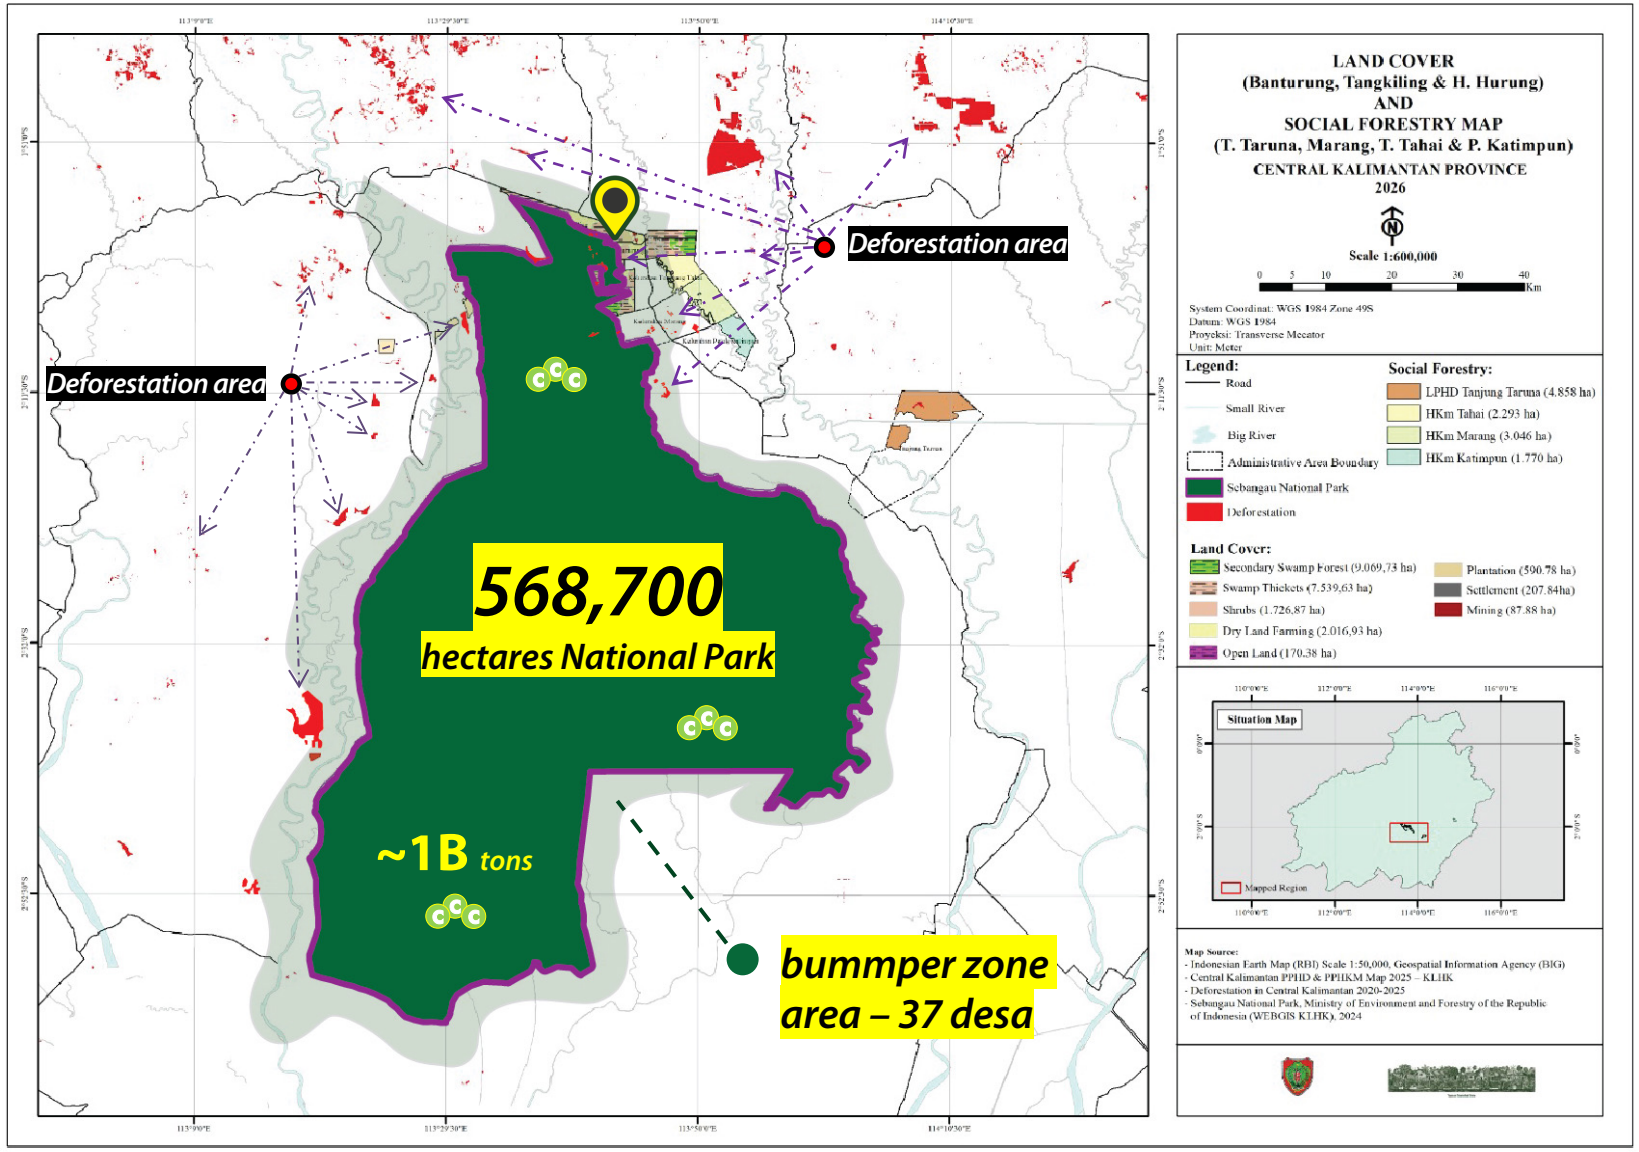

The Global Challenge

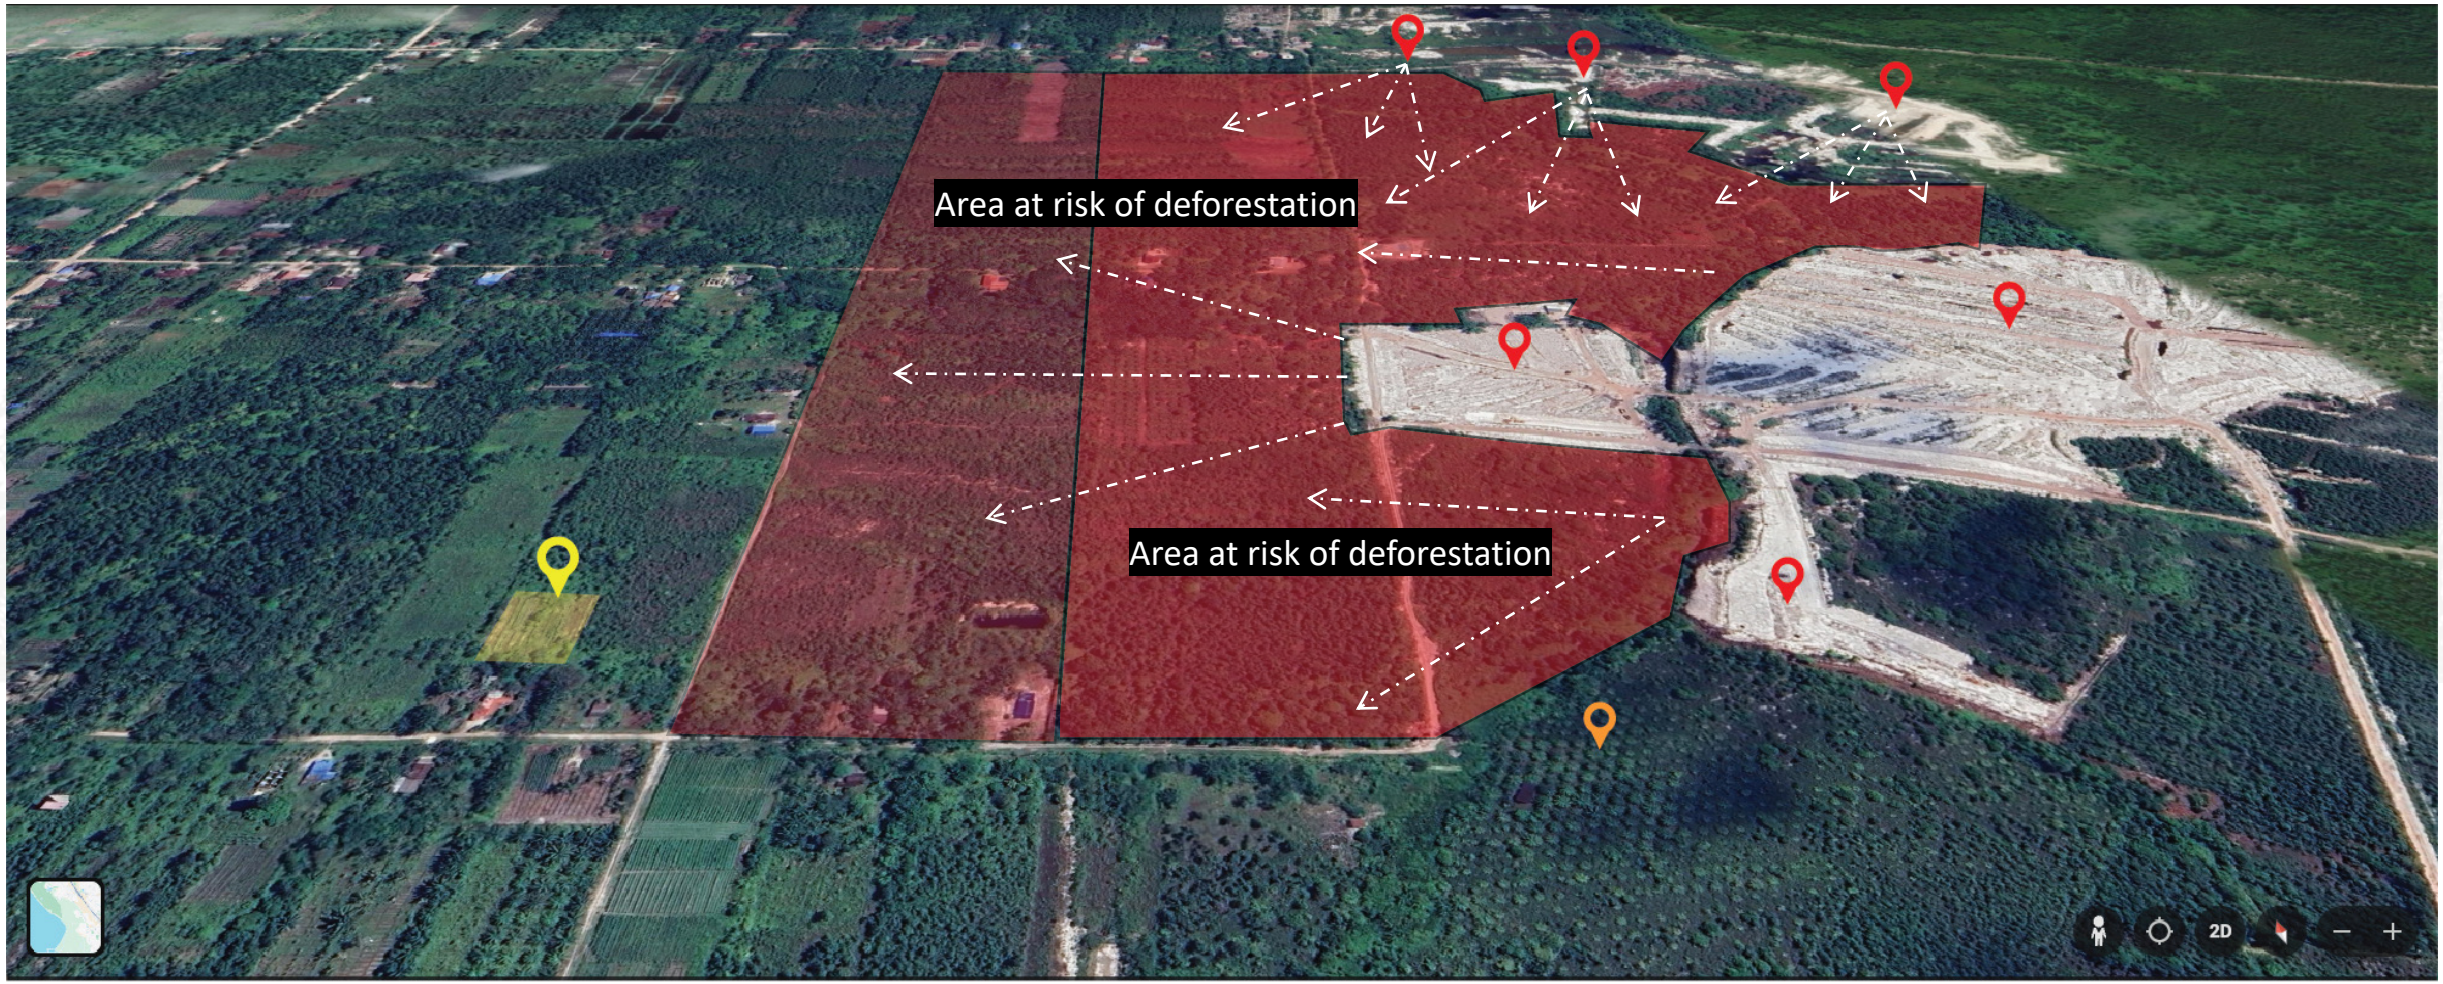

Land degradation is outpacing restoration. Short-term projects deliver real results, but lasting recovery needs strong local institutions and partnerships that outlive the grant.

Bukit Batu: A Landscape of Challenges

On the northern edge of the Sebangau Peatland Landscape, Bukit Batu faces sand mining, deforestation, peat degradation and rising fire risk, all at once.

… and of Opportunitiest

Yet the same landscape holds assets: active communities, agroforestry and ecotourism potential, local food enterprises, and a committed local organisation, FUBN.

A One-Year Grant as Catalyst

Because a long-term vision for Bukit Batu already existed, the one-year G20 grant became a catalyst rather than a standalone project.

People Before Trees

YTS invested in people before planting. Sustained mentoring turned FUBN into the local driver of collective action.

FUBN Governance Training

Regular Meetings

Community Leadership Actions

Demplots as Classrooms

Agroforestry demonstration plots are living classrooms, where farmers experiment, learn together, and build confidence before adopting new practices widely.

Early Results

Because a long-term vision for Bukit Batu already existed, the one-year G20 grant became a catalyst rather than a standalone project.

The Invisible Outcome

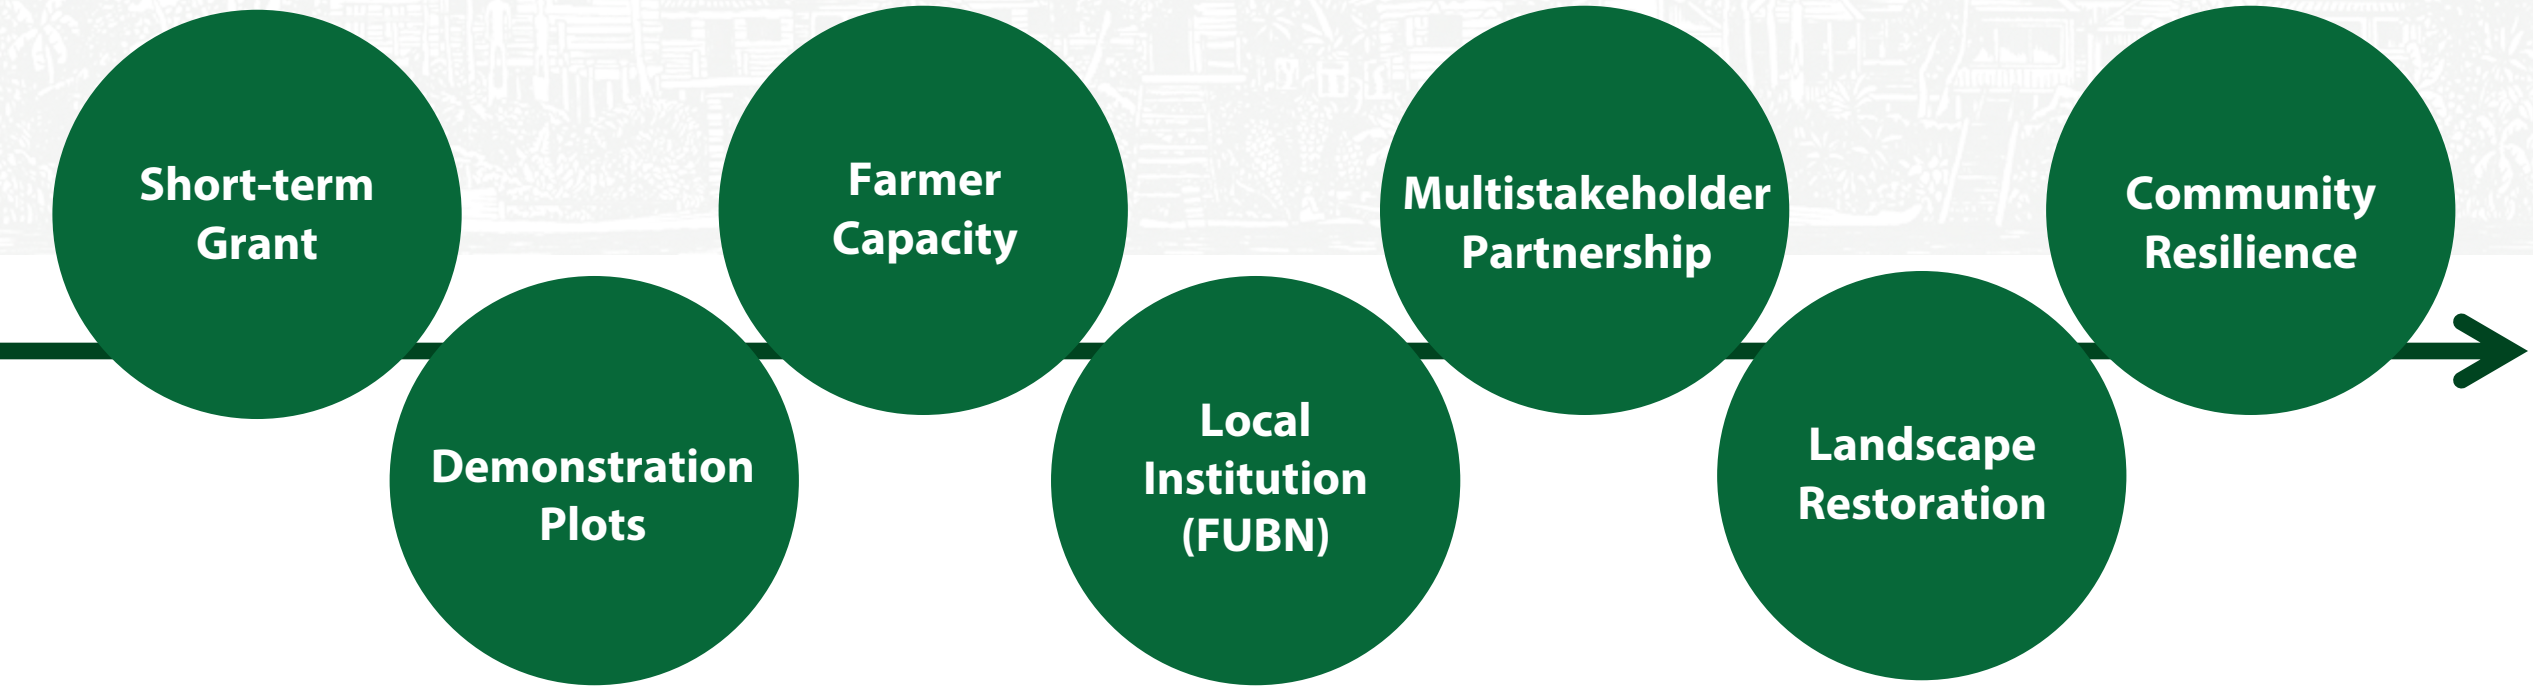

The most valuable outcome cannot be measured in hectares. A stronger FUBN is what will sustain restoration long after the project ends.

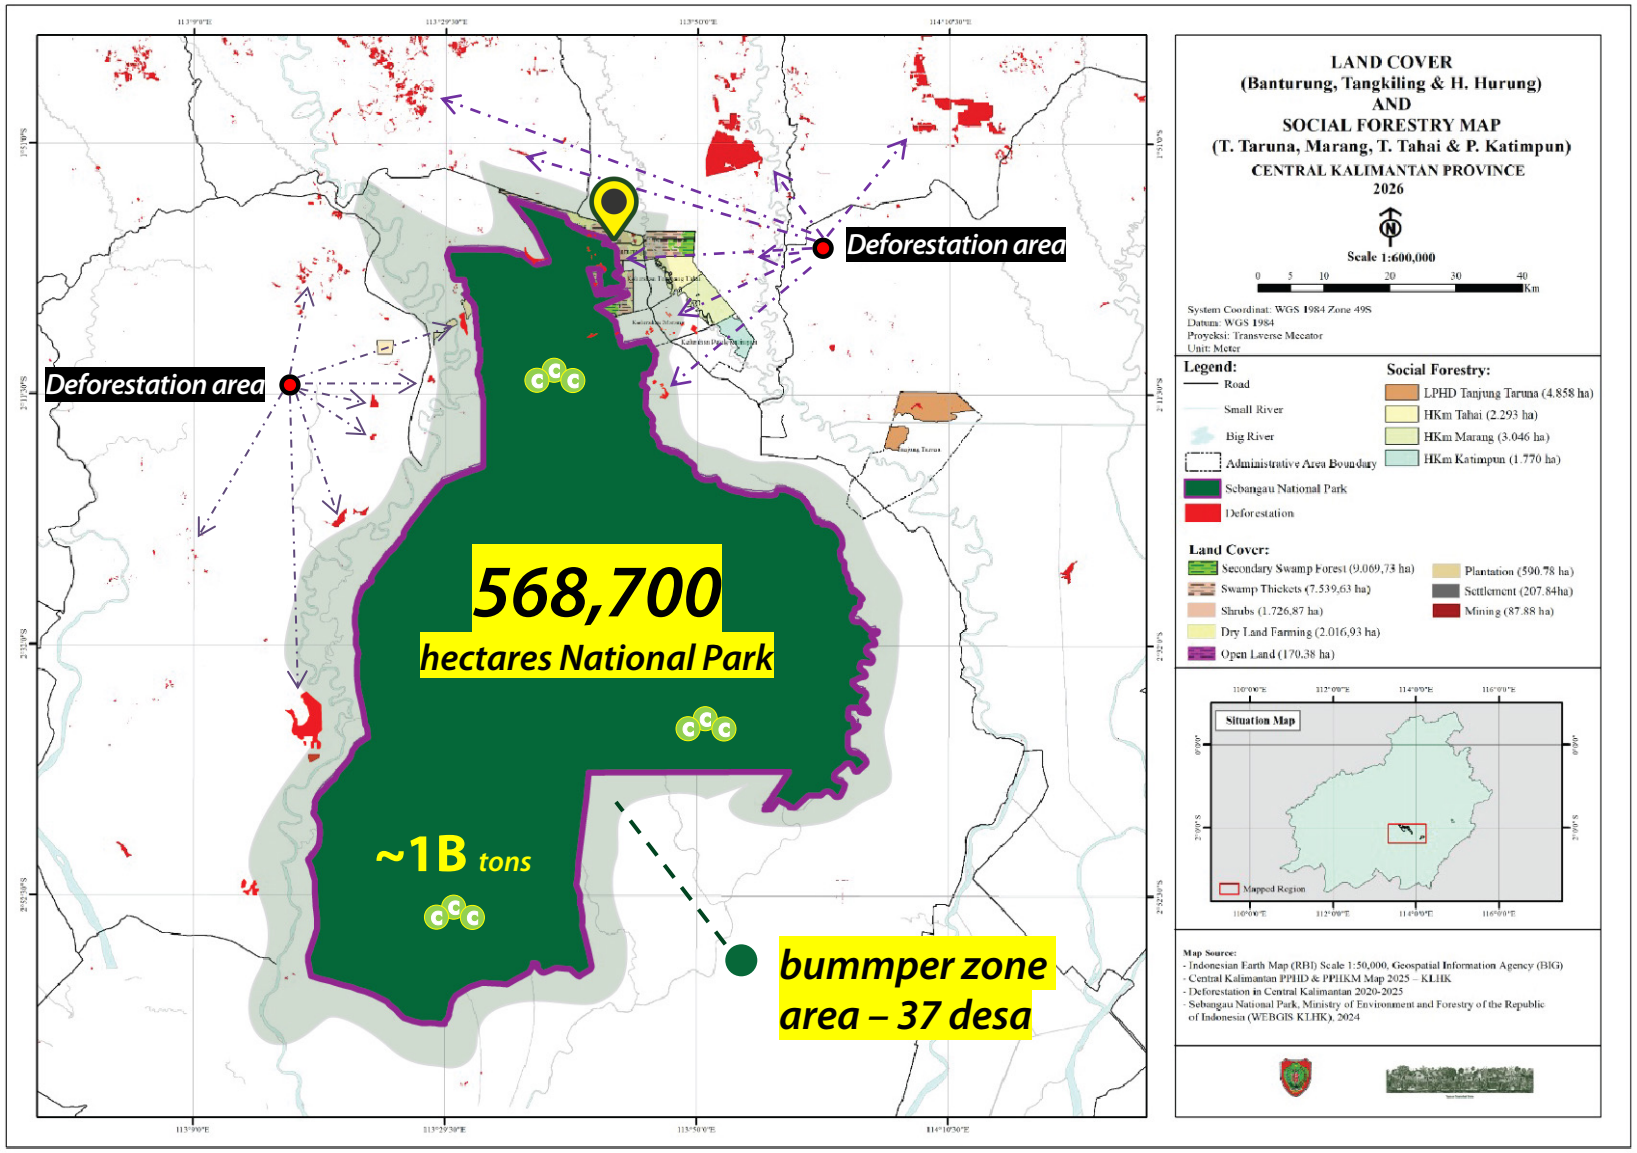

Why It Worked

The grant worked because it sat inside a longer strategy, linking local institutions, sustainable livelihoods and partnerships into one coherent pathway.

A Much Larger Landscape

Bukit Batu is the entry point. Ahead lies Sebangau: over half a million hectares, holding one of the world's largest tropical peat carbon stores.

Scaling Through Partnership

No single institution can restore a landscape. YTS is widening a Multi-stakeholder Partnership across government, communities, academia, NGOs and the private sector.

For Policy Makers

Governments can accelerate restoration by rewarding collaboration, lowering institutional barriers, and backing long-term multi-stakeholder partnerships.

The MSP scale-up has just started in the wider Sebangau landscape, including Bukit Batu in Palangka Raya. The MoU with the Mayor of Palangka Raya reflects government support for YTS activities in the area.

Government — Policy — Landscape Restoration — Partnerships

For Donors

Funding becomes transformational when it strengthens institutions, supports strategic planning, and creates learning that other landscapes can replicate.

Looking Ahead

Next: collaborative initiatives across two regencies and one city around Sebangau, linking biodiversity, carbon storage, climate resilience and restorative local economies.

Short-term projects
can create long-term transformation when they strengthen institutions and join a shared vision.
Projects end. Local institutions endure.
Landscapes recover.
